Description

An Elizabeth II silver model of a twelve point royal stag by Edward Barnard realistically modelled and cast in sterling, and mounted on a stone base. The silver model itself is 120mm tall.

Stags are classified by the number of points or tines on their antlers. A stag with six points on each, making a total of 12, marks him as a royal stag. To be considered a monarch, a stag should have a total of 16 points.
