Description

An exceptional pair of Victorian sterling silver candelabra by the renowned London silversmith Francis Boone Thomas, hallmarked in London 1874.

Each candelabrum is finely cast and richly detailed, standing on a circular stepped base adorned with intricate foliate decoration. The elegant central column rises to a classical urn finial, flanked by sweeping, symmetrical arms. These scrolling branches are embellished with finely chased floral roundels and terminate in beautifully shaped drip pans and detachable sconces.

The design reflects the refined regency taste of the early 19th century, combining balanced proportions with elaborate ornamentation. A striking feature is the crisp definition of the cast elements, including stylised masks and floral motifs, demonstrating the high quality of workmanship associated with leading London workshops of the period.

After an original design by Benjamin Smith, these candelabra are true to the quality for which Smith was known. They are exceptionally heavy, without loading, and have incredible depth and quality to the decorative detail.
